LastPass...|

This is your final notice that the inactive LastPass account associated with rajaee.ashkan@gmail.com will be deleted in the next few days.

Per our technical and organizational measures \(TOMS\), we're deleting accounts that have been inactive for 2 years.

No longer want your account?

If the account is no longer needed, no further action is necessary. Do not log in. If the account remains inactive, it will be deleted in the next few days.

Want to keep your LastPass account?

Just log in to your LastPass account (<https://lastpass.com/?ac=1>) within the next 3 days.

What if I am locked out of my account and/or don't remember my master password?

You can use account recovery on the LastPass website or browser extension if you have logged in at least once on your device. Click 'Forgot password' on the login screen and follow the step-by-step process.

As a reminder, as part of our zero knowledge encryption model, your master password is never known to LastPass and is not stored or maintained by LastPass. Because of this, it is not possible for LastPass Support to reset or change your master password if it is forgotten.

For more information on recovering a forgotten master password, review this support article.

What happens when an account is deleted?

Once an account has been deleted, it cannot be reopened. If you want to use LastPass after this account has been deleted, you will need to create a new account. While you can use the same email address, the account itself will be brand new and will need to be repopulated with your data, credentials, settings, etc.

Need the account data, but no longer need the account?

You can find details on how to export data and how to delete the account. It's important you delete the account once the data has been exported. Otherwise, you will appear as an active user and your account will not be deleted by LastPass.
